The 1968 Principal File contains the main office files of Dwight D. Eisenhower’s Gettysburg Office. The series is divided into three subseries. The first thirty-six boxes comprise a subject file arranged by categories, such as appointments, Eisenhower Center, foreign affairs, gifts, invitations, memberships, messages, political affairs, public relations, and trips. The alphabetical subseries occupies the next eleven boxes, and is arranged by the name of the individual or organization corresponding with Eisenhower. The final four boxes contain the “Bulk File” subseries, which has printed materials and oversized items.

In 1968 Dwight Eisenhower suffered heart attacks in April and August, and he spent a number of months in the hospital, first at March Air Force Base in California and later at Walter Reed in Washington, D.C. His health problems greatly affected his ability to keep up his correspondence and limited the number of appointments he could keep. The series contains a large number of get-well letters and cards. Many requests for endorsements, special messages, autographs, gifts, and letters, as well as invitations to various events, were turned down by his office staff due to Eisenhower’s ill health and the limits placed on his activities by his doctors.

Although Ike’s ability to travel and participate in many events was restricted by his growing health concerns, he continued to communicate with many prominent people on vital issues of the day. His correspondence frequently contains comments on U.S. foreign policy, particularly on Vietnam and the Middle East. Eisenhower was critical of anti-war protesters and supported President Johnson on the war effort. However, he did point out that President Truman was the first president to send aid to Vietnam and that President Kennedy had greatly increased the role of the U.S. in Vietnam. The “Domino Theory” continued to dominate his thinking on this subject. He believed that if South Vietnam fell to the Communists the rest of Asia and Indonesia would also be lost.

Since 1968 was a presidential election year, politics was a major topic in Eisenhower’s correspondence, as well as in the few interviews and press conferences that he had. He offered comments on all of the leading Republican candidates for president, including Nelson Rockefeller, William Scranton, Governor Romney, and Richard Nixon. Democratic candidates, Robert Kennedy (“a voluble adolescent”) and George Wallace (“Captain Kidd with a shave”), also merited some attention. In the end Eisenhower decided Nixon was the best qualified Republican candidate and issued his endorsement on July 19.

To assist the Republican cause, Eisenhower reviewed and suggested changes in Republican National Committee position papers dealing with foreign policy issues. He spoke to the Republican National Convention in August via closed circuit television from Walter Reed Hospital. In a letter to Ray Bliss, head of the Republican National Committee, Ike predicted that “1968 will be the year of the elephant.”
While Eisenhower backed the President on foreign policy, he sharply differed with the domestic policies and programs of the “Great Society.” He was very concerned about inflation, deficit spending, the imbalance of payments, and declining gold reserves and favored higher taxes and reduced spending. One area where he thought government spending was becoming excessive was in education. He wrote a letter to former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Marion Folsom, declaring that the National Defense Education Act was originally only intended to last four years and not become a long-term program.

The ex-president expressed concern about the problems many colleges and universities were having with mass demonstrations, picketing, and student unrest. He was very disappointed with the situation at Columbia University when events led to the resignation of the chancellor.

President Johnson visited Eisenhower in California and discussed the Vietnam situation. Ike also had visits with Harold Macmillan, General Westmoreland, Governor Raymond Shafer, the King of Norway, Billy Graham, and others. He was interviewed by Arthur Funk on events of World War II, and he had at least three press conferences where he commented on politics, the candidates for president, the balance of trade, de Gaulle, taxes, and overpopulation.

Despite the physical limitations imposed by his health problems, Eisenhower achieved the dream of most golfers by scoring a hole-in-one on February 6, 1968. He was playing on a par-three course at Seven Lakes Country Club. This event generated a lot of media coverage and hundreds of letters congratulating him on his achievement.

Although Eisenhower’s staff declined offers of membership in various organizations and withdrew his involvement in others due to the need to curtail his activities, Ike continued to correspond with a number of organizations that he supported or endorsed. The American Heart Association, People to People, the PGA, Freedoms Foundation, the National Football Hall of Fame, the Citizens Committee for Peace with Freedom in Vietnam, and numerous golf and country clubs continued to list Eisenhower as an honorary officer or member.

In 1968 Eisenhower began serious work on a book about the Cold War. His correspondence with Sam Vaughan at Doubleday includes a list of chapters and Vaughan’s comments on a draft of Chapter One.

The 1968 Principal File has interesting information on historical events, smaller issues, and trivia. There are numerous touching letters from various individuals who offered to donate their hearts so Ike could have a transplant. Handwritten letters from school children, a handwritten note from Ed Sullivan, and a birthday greeting from the City of Abilene, Kansas, with over two thousand signatures are additional items of memorabilia found in this series.
Seventeen items have been removed from this series and transferred to the Museum. One hundred and fifty-four still photographs, one audio tape, one 45 rpm record, one color slide, and two transparencies have been sent to the audiovisual collection. Sixteen books and periodicals were transferred to the Book Collection. Five pages of documents were closed under the donor’s deed of gift. One hundred and eighty-one pages of original documents were removed, placed in the Preservation File, and replaced with Xerox copies. There are no security classified documents in this series.

The 1968 Principal File contains some excellent correspondence expressing the candid views of an elder statesman on a variety of important issues. Ike’s correspondence contains occasional reflections on his boyhood years, West Point, and World War II. There are also some very poignant documents relating to his health problems and his birthday.
