SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The papers of Major General Howard McC. Snyder span the years 1910-1968 with about two-thirds of the collection falling into the period 1955-1963. These papers pertain to Dwight D. Eisenhower's medical history and consist of medical records, a medical diary, correspondence, and drafts of chapters for a planned book.

General Snyder was born in Cheyenne, Wyoming on February 7, 1881. After receiving his M.D. degree from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in 1905 he became a contract surgeon at Fort Douglas, Utah. His experience with military service was so favorable that he decided upon a military-medical career. He graduated from the U.S. Army Medical School in Washington, D.C. in June 1908 with high honors and was simultaneously commissioned a first lieutenant in the United States Army Medical Corps.

General Snyder's first military assignment took him to the Philippines in 1909 where he served with the Research Board of Tropical Medicine. In 1911 he returned to the United States and, in the next twenty-five years, his varied command and instructional assignments took him to numerous posts in the United States and one in Puerto Rico. From 1936 to 1940 General Snyder was medical adviser to the National Guard Bureau in Washington, D.C.

From December, 1940 until June 1945 General Snyder was Assistant to the Inspector General of the War Department, a job which required him to travel to all theaters of operations during World War II. Toward the end of the war Snyder became closely acquainted with Dwight D. Eisenhower and, although technically retired because of his age in March 1945, remained on active duty in Europe as General Eisenhower's personal physician until after the surrender of Germany.

General Snyder continued his association with the Eisenhower family after the war, treating Mamie Eisenhower for pneumonia in November 1945 and, after retiring from military service, remaining close to Dwight D. Eisenhower at Columbia University. Dr. Snyder became senior adviser to the Conservation of Human Resources Project and Manpower Council, a project instituted by Eisenhower in 1950 to find ways of correcting the manpower wastage identified during World War II.

In January 1951 General Snyder was again called to active duty and was assigned to Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers, Europe (SHAPE) where he soon became a special adviser to General Eisenhower. After being retired from military service once again, Snyder rode Eisenhower's campaign train in September 1952 during Eisenhower's successful bid for the presidency.

After Eisenhower's inauguration as President in January 1953, Snyder was appointed to the White House staff and remained the President's personal physician throughout the Administration. General Snyder's duties in the White House involved providing close personal attention to the medical needs of President Eisenhower and his family, as well as the White House staff. This personal attention included accompanying the President on his travels--overseas trips and those within the United States, vacations, and golf outings. He administered medications, took temperatures, gave the President daily medical advice and recorded observations on the President's activities, disposition, and physical condition. General Snyder rendered initial treatment to Dwight Eisenhower when the President suffered a heart attack in September 1955 and was at the President's side during the ileitis operation in June 1956.

General Snyder continued his association with Dwight Eisenhower after the President left office. It was during the former President's retirement that General Snyder assumed the role of historian. General Snyder believed that a record of Eisenhower's medical history could be of significant medical and historic value, especially since General Eisenhower was the first president to have suffered a heart attack in office and to have undergone an ileitis operation. In 1961 General Snyder began reviewing Eisenhower's medical history, gathering materials from military and medical files from 1910 forward in order to supplement his own knowledge and data concerning Eisenhower's medical background. In addition to acquiring summary notations from various files for the period 1910-62, Snyder gathered folders of Eisenhower medical reports from 1939 until 1967 and studied Eisenhower's appointment calendars from 1945 through his presidency.

In 1965 Dr. Snyder dictated three draft chapters of a narrative medical history of Dwight Eisenhower. These drafts included chapters covering the years 1945-51, Eisenhower's heart attack in September 1955 and his ileitis operation in June 1956. General Snyder's poor health from 1966 until his death in September 1970 precluded his completing the book.

Documentation in these papers is especially detailed for the period in Eisenhower's life following his heart attack in 1955 through 1963. General Snyder's own notes which he began dictating following the heart attack comprise an extensive diary-like chronology of Snyder's observations and notations of factors and stresses affecting the President's physical condition and disposition. Interspersed throughout this detailed medical record are summaries of conversations and comments regarding policy issues, politics, personalities and trips. Supplementing the medical diary are files of doctors' progress notes, narrative summaries, laboratory reports and other clinical records plus correspondence between General Snyder and other doctors and Eisenhower's personal friends. The extremely personal information contained in these papers provide insights into Dwight D. Eisenhower's behavior and personality seldom found in his official military and presidential papers.

The portions of General Snyder's papers which were copied and deposited in the Eisenhower Library in 1971 consist of significant correspondence and medical records pertaining to General Eisenhower. In accordance with arrangements made by Snyder in 1958 his complete personal papers were donated to the University of Wyoming. The portion of the Snyder papers copied for deposit in the Eisenhower Library have been organized in seven series, retaining with slight modifications the basic arrangement of the papers as received by the Library in 1971. In addition to the approximate 6,200 pages contained in boxes 1 to 11, the Snyder papers include duplicates of the medical diary and correspondence series in boxes 12-15.
