The “Angels Division” was activated in 1943 and landed in the Philippine Islands in November 1944, where it spent the remainder of the war clearing the enemy from Leyte and Luzon Islands. In August 1945 the Division was sent to Japan and placed on occupation duty.

This series consists of unit histories, historical reports, periodic reports and field orders. The bulk of the material dates from the time the Division was on occupation duty in Japan. The records are arranged according to the classifications scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

The most detailed information on the activities of the Division can be found in the divisional unit histories and the G-2 periodic reports. Although these only cover the latter part of 1948, they contain much information about the activities of the Division and local events such as labor demonstrations and Communist Party activities. The records of the Division’s service in the Philippine Islands are mostly statistical in nature and contain practically no narrative information.

The Thirteenth Airborne Division was activated on August 13, 1943, and left the United States for Europe on January 25, 1945. After landing in France it continued training. Although it was assigned to the First Allied Airborne Army in Europe, the Division saw no combat during the war. However, one of its elements, the 517th Parachute Infantry Regiment, had seen combat in Italy and Southern France before being assigned to the Division. On August 23, 1945, the Division returned to the United States, where it was inactivated on February 25, 1946.

This series consists of journals, unit histories, and publicity material. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

The bulk of the material in this series consists of G-3 journals. These cover the period from April to August 1945 and provide detailed information on the training activities of the Division. In addition to the journals there are also unit histories of several organic elements of the Division. The histories summarize the activities of the various elements but provide little information on the history of the Division as a whole.

The “Thunder from Heaven Division” was activated in 1943 and landed in France in December 1944. For the rest of the war it was active in the Ardennes-Alsace, Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns. The Division also served briefly on occupation duty.

This series consists of histories, journals, after action reports and periodic reports. The bulk of the material dates from December 1944 to June 1945 when the Division was in active combat. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

Most of the records in this series pertain to various staff sections and organizational components of the Division. The operations of the G-2 and G-3 sections, the Division Artillery and the 194th Glider Infantry Regiment are the most completely documented. Of particular interest are the records of the 17th CIC Detachment, which contain reports of the interrogation of German prisoners. Also of interest is a large collection of miscellaneous G-3 reports. These consist of periodic reports, field orders, administrative orders, memos and map overlays. The reports were originated by the 17th Airborne Division, its organic elements, and other army units that the Division dealt with. Each document is numbered and a register of the documents is filed at the start of the reports.

The “All American Division” was the most active American airborne division in World War II. It received training in North Africa and saw combat in Sicily and Italy prior to moving to England to prepare for the Normandy Invasion. On D-Day the Division dropped behind enemy lines to cut off enemy reinforcements. Later the Division participated in Operation Market-Garden in Holland, one of the largest airborne operations in history.

This series consists of histories, reports and journals. The bulk of the material dates from 1943 to 1945 when the Division was in active combat. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

Probably the most useful records in this series are the set of narrative histories and operations reports which describe the activities of the Division in Sicily, Italy, Normandy, Holland, and in Germany after the end of the war. Also of interest is a collection of miscellaneous documents, containing G-3 reports, orders and histories, which describe the organization and operations of the Division. Each document is numbered and a register of the documents is filed in front of the first document. The series contains very little information on the various staff sections and organizational components of the Division.

101st AIRBORNE DIVISION, 1942-1949

7,200 pages (approximate)
Boxes 7-15

The "Screaming Eagles Division" was one of the most famous American divisions to participate in World War II. It was activated in 1942 and parachuted into France during the Normandy Invasion. For the remainder of the war the Division fought in the Normandy, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe campaigns. The Division became famous for its heroic stand at Bastogne, Belgium, during the German offensive in the Battle of the Bulge. It had also taken part in Operation Market in Holland, one of the largest airborne operations in history.

This series consists of histories, after action reports, periodic reports, journals, orders, newspaper and magazine articles and correspondence. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch.

The records of the 101st Airborne Division are among the most comprehensive in this collection. About one-third of the series consists of general historical reports. These reports contain information on every phase of the Division's existence from the time it was activated until the end of the war. There is excellent coverage of the planning and execution of Operations Market, Dragoon and Neptune, as well as coverage of the Division's stand in Bastogne during the Battle of the Bulge.

The records of the Division's historical association are also located in this series. After the end of the war the Association collected a large amount of information on the history of the Division, including anecdotes from individual soldiers. The final product was Rendezvous with Destiny, a book on the history of the Division, a copy of which is in the book collection of the Eisenhower Library. The records of the Association contain most of the material collected from the book, including correspondence with individuals, and a rough draft of the book itself.

The activities of the general staff sections are well documented. The G-2 records are of particular importance because they contain information on the intelligence activities of the Division. This includes details of German sabotage and other subversive activities. The CIC records pertain to the interrogation of prisoners of war. Some prisoners were close to top-ranking Nazi officials and provided interesting accounts of the Nazi leaders.

About one-quarter of the series consists of records of various organic units of the Division. The activities of the component artillery and infantry units are especially well documented. Several parachute and glider battalions which participated at Normandy and Bastogne have excellent narrative reports which describe their activities in depth. The records of the numerous medical detachments contain information on the rates of disease and wounds among Division personnel.

The Division participated in the Algeria-French Morocco, Tunisia, Naples-Foggia, Rome-Arno, North Apennines, and Po Valley campaigns. After the German forces in Italy capitulated, the Division engaged in occupational duties in Germany.

10, 000 pages (approximate)
Boxes 49-60

The “Spearhead” Division was activated in April 1941 and was sent to England in September 1943. In late June 1944 the Division landed in Normandy and entered combat near the town of St. Lo. During the remainder of the war it participated in the Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe campaigns. After the war the Division spent six months on occupation duty before being inactivated in November 1945.

The records of the Third Armored Division cover the period from June 1944 to November 1945, with one item dated 1949, and provide a detailed account of the Division’s activities in Europe. The material has been arranged in five sub-series according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch of the Adjutant General’s Office. The General Historical and Operational Reports sub-series contains drafts of the Division’s published history, a journal kept by the Division’s Chief of Staff, and after action reports of various units attached to the Division. The after action reports include monthly histories of the 32nd, 33rd, and 36th Armored Infantry Regiments; the 54th, 67th and 391st Field Artillery Battalions; the 486th Antiaircraft Artillery Battalion; the 23rd Armored Engineer Battalion; the 45th Armored Medical Battalion; the 83rd armored Reconnaissance Battalion; and the 703rd Tank Destroyer Battalion.

The G-2 and G-3 reports contain information on the intelligence activities and military operations of the Division. The G-4 reports, relating to supply and logistics, are very fragmentary and incomplete. The staffs Section Reports contain miscellaneous material on the activities of various components of the Division. These include the journal file and S-2 files of the Division Artillery Command, G-2 Periodic Reports of the VII Corps, post-war general orders for the Reserve Command, and various reports for the 67th Armored Field Artillery Battalion, 23rd Armored Engineer Battalion, Supply Battalion, and 703rd Tank Destroyer Battalion.

The 4th Armored Division was activated on April 15, 1941, but did not see combat until elements of the Division landed at Utah Beach on July 11, 1944. The Division participated in the Northern France and the Rhineland campaigns. The Division countered the German winter offensive of 1944 and was one of the first units to relieve the encircled 101st Airborne Division at Bastogne. The Division then marched east into Germany and south into Czechoslovakia, having reached Strakonice when the war ended. After serving a period of occupation duty in Germany, the Division returned to the U. S. and deactivation in April 1946. Some elements of the Division remain in Germany as constabulary units.

The series contains unit histories, after action reports, photographs, intelligence reports, lists, schedules, messages, map overlays, periodic reports, situation reports, journals, special reports, operation reports, and operation memoranda. The bulk of the material covers the period from July 1944 to May 1945. Some coverage of the period from 1941 to 1944 is found in the Signal Officer's journal, the Surgeon's Office journal, and the Military Police Platoon history. Coverage of late 1945 and early 1946 is found in many staff section reports. The material is organized into seven sub-series according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

The G-2, G-3 and staff section sub-series are of primary interest in this series. The G-2 sub-series contains numerous POW interrogation reports, while the G-3 sub-series contains special reports on German counterintelligence and infiltration techniques, and werewolf activities, especially near the end of the war. The staff section sub-series, in particular the material from Combat Command "A" and Reserve Command, contains numerous examples of the problems and responsibilities of an army of occupation, such as black markets, displaced persons, and escaped prisoners.

The series has been arranged into six sub-series, according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch, and has been placed in chronological order there under. The Public Relations sub-series comprises the largest part of this series. This sub-series includes a large number of photographs and newspaper clippings, which cover the activities of the Division during its period of training at Camps Chaffee and Cooke. The photographs have been removed to the audio-visual collections of the Library.

The "Lucky Seventh" Armored Division was activated in 1942 and received training at Camp Polk, Louisiana and Fort Benning, Georgia. In January 1944 the Division left the United States for overseas, trained in England, and landed in France the following August. For the remainder of the war the Division participated in the Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe campaigns. After the war it was on occupation duty in Germany until returning to the United States in October 1945.

This series contains histories, after action reports, periodic reports, journals, messages and newspaper articles. Most of the material pertains to the activities of the Division in Europe during 1944 and 1945. However, a large number of press releases and newspaper clippings contain information on the early history of the Division in the United States. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

The information in this series which pertains to the combat history of the Division is extremely detailed. The after action reports and G-3 reports and journals describe the military operations of the Division in great detail. Many of the G-3 reports were originated by the Army Corps to which the Division was attached and contain information on the operations of the Division in relation to those of neighboring units. The G-2 reports and journals describe the intelligence activities of the Division and contain information on the enemy order of battle and interrogations of prisoners of war.

The information on the Division's occupation duty is also extremely detailed. The G-2 and G-3 reports describe the Division's work in guarding important installations and processing prisoners of war and displaced persons. There is also much information on subversive activities conducted in the Division's area and relation between the Division and the Russian army.

In addition to the textual records, a large number of photographs were found in this series. These depicted the activities of the Division during the period of training in the United States. The photographs have been transferred to the audio-visual collection of the Eisenhower Library.

8th ARMORED DIVISION, 1944-1945

1,600 pages (approximate)
Boxes 96-97

The "Iron Snake Division" was activated in 1942 and left the United States for overseas in November 1944. After a brief period of training in England the Division landed in France in January 1945. For the remainder of the war it participated in the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe campaigns. When the war ended the Division went on occupation duty in the Harz Mountains in Germany and Czechoslovakia.

This series consists of periodic reports, journals, histories and orders. Most of the records date from January to September 1945 when the Division was active in Europe. The material is arranged according to the classification scheme of the Department Records Branch and chronologically there under.

The bulk of the records in this series are G-1 periodic reports, G-1 journals and G-3 journals. The G-1 material contains statistical data on the personnel strength of the Division and its attached units. The G-3 journals describe the activities of the Division's G-3 staff as well as the operations of the Division as a whole. There is much information on troop movements, prisoners of war and relations with the Russian army scattered through the G-3 journals.

The series contains practically no information on the operations of the organic units of the Division. The most useful item is a brief history of the Division's Combat Command "A" during the first half of 1945. This history provides a summary of the activities of the entire Division.

The “Phantom Division” was activated in 1942 from elements of the 2nd Cavalry Division. It entered combat in October 1944 along the border of Luxemburg and Germany. For the remainder of the war the Division was active in the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe campaigns. During the Battle of the Bulge the Division was subjected to heavy enemy attacks. It delayed the German drive toward Bastogne until the 101st Airborne Division could prepare a defense of the city. In March 1945 the Division participated in the drive to the Rhine River and captured intact the Ludendorff Bridge at Remagen, the only remaining bridge across the Rhine.

This series consists of histories, after action reports, journals, messages orders and commendations. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch.

The history of the 9th Armored Division is poorly documented by this series. A large segment of the records pertain to the training maneuvers of the 2nd Cavalry Division in Kansas prior to the activation of the 9th Armored Division. There is very little information on the activities of the Division as a whole during its active combat engagements in Europe. Of particular interest, however, is a detailed history of Combat Command “A” which provides a useful summary of the history of the entire Division.

CHRONOLOGY

March 7, 1945	Elements of the Division reached Remagen and captured the Ludendorff Bridge.

The "Tiger Division" was activated in July 1942, but it did not enter combat until November 1, 1944. By the time the war ended the Division had participated in numerous operations and engagements of the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe campaigns. The Division helped halt the German winter offensive in December 1944 in the area near Bastogne.

This series contains histories, after action reports, operation reports, periodic reports, special reports, intelligence summaries, journals, notes, bulletins, lists, general orders, field orders, maps, map overlays, training materials, and message logs. Most of the material covers the period from November 1944 to May 1945 with some additional coverage in the form of training materials for 1943 and 1944 and limited reports for June to August 1945. The material is organized into seven sub-series according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

Of interest in this series are the journals and message logs of the Division Artillery Section, some training manuals for battle drill, and a series of nine maps of the battle of Bastogne.

A little over one third of the series consists of G-3 reports and a second third is made up of staff section reports. About half of the remainder are G-2 reports and the balance includes a few G-1, G-4 and G-5 reports and several folders of division after action reports.

The “Thunderbolt Division” was activated in the fall of 1942 and spent succeeding two years in training at various locations throughout the United States. It initially sailed for France in late September of 1944, but the unit was diverted enroute to the United Kingdom for an additional two months’ training on the Salisbury Plain Area. Once on the continent, participation in the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe campaigns gave the Division 96 days of combat. Throughout the unit’s combat and occupational duty it was assigned to the Third Army, 12th Army Group, but variously to the VIII, XII and XX Corps.

The standard directive and reporting documents, e.g., field orders and periodic reports, account for most of the material in this series and are almost entirely confined to the unit’s period of combat duty. The bulk of the material dated as late as May. Recording documents, including such items as personal notes and memos are limited to a few journals and message logs and one folder titled “Liaison Officer’s Notes.” The latter, in addition to a few G-5 periodic reports dated as late as June, constitute the only source of information on the occupation period.

Aside from the substantial coverage of the unit’s combat history this series offers only limited information on other topics in the area of military history. Material on the concentration camps is thin. Internal administrative matters, community including refugees and displaced persons, and relations with the Russian Army are all covered more adequately but still not to any great degree. Combat conditions, from a medical point of view, are described in a report originated by the Division’s Office of the Surgeon.

The material has been arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and then chronologically by month, or in some cases be portions thereof, depending upon the content of the original file. Little arrangement within individual file folders has been attempted.

The “Hellcat Division” participated in the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe campaigns. The Division was also engaged in security duty in Germany prior to leaving for the U.S. in November 1945.

This series contains histories, after action reports, operation reports, periodic reports, journals, messages, memoranda, supply memos, and map overlays. The series covers the period from 1942 to late 1945, but the bulk of the material deals with the period from November 1944 to November 1945. Except for a published pictorial sketchbook there is very little material on the Division prior to November 1944. The material is organized into seven sub series based on the classification system of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

Although most elements of the 12th Armored Division’s organizational structure are represented in the series, there is very little material on general history or division-level operations and on activities of G-1, G-4, and G-5 sections. Slightly over one-third of the material is made up of G-3 reports, and staff section reports make up an equal amount. G-2 reports make up about one-fifth of the series.

Of particular interest are the G-2 and S-2 reports and messages dealing with problems during the occupation of Germany from May to October 1945. The reports and messages describe sabotage attempts and incidents of conflict, looting, and stealing, involving “D.P. s”, “Russians”, and German civilians. Also of interest are the Surgeon’s reports, including charts and tables on battle casualty, exhaustion, and venereal disease rates for December 1944 to 1945.

A published history of the 12th Armored Division and its role in World War II is available in the book collection.

The “Black Cat Division” participated in operations of the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns. The 13th Armored Division entered combat around April 10, 1945, in the northwestern part of Germany and moved southward across Germany and into Austria by early May 1945

The series contains unit history materials, after action reports, periodic reports, general orders, field orders, map overlays, a roster of officers, a list of awards and decorations, and ammunition supply report. The bulk of the material covers March to May 1945, but there is some coverage of the Division’s history prior to this period. The material is organized into seven sub-series according to the classification system of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

General historical and operational reports and G-1 to G-5 materials are very limited and constitute only 20 to 25 percent of the series. Thus, staff section reports make up about 75 to 80 per cent of this series.

Of particular interest in this series are the S-1 daily reports which are included with the after action reports of some of the staff sections.

The official published history of the 13th Armored Division is available in the book collection.

14TH ARMORED DIVISION, 1944-1945

2,400 pages (approximate)
Boxes 117-119

The "Liberator Division" was activated in 1942 and landed in Southern France in October 1944. After a brief period of defensive patrolling along the Franco-Italian boarder, the Division moved north to the Vosges Mountains where it was attached to the VI Corps. For the remainder of the war it participated in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns. When the war ended the Division served on occupation duty for a few months before returning to the United States.

This series consists of histories, periodic reports, orders, journals and summaries. The bulk of the material covers the period from November 1944 to May 1945 when the Division was in active combat. A few records date from the time the Division was on occupation duty. There is no information on the early history of the Division in the United States. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

Most of the records in this series are histories and periodic reports which pertain to the G-2 and G-3 staff sections and various organic elements of the Division. There is little information on the activities of the Division as a whole. Of particular interest is a small published pamphlet, Now it Can Be Told, which describes the activities of the U. S. seventh Army in eastern France during December 1944 and January 1945.

The operations of the various organic elements are well documented. Histories exist for the three Combat Commands and several other units. There is a large set of S-3 reports which were originated by the tank, infantry and engineer battalions that were attached to the Division. These reports provide detailed information on the operations of the Division's organic elements during December 1944, January 1945, and the period immediately after the end of the war.

Box 120

The 16th Armored Division saw only three days of combat during World War II. After landing in France in February 1945 the Division did not advance to the front but remained in a quiet area until April when it began a security and training mission at Nurnberg, Germany. On May 5 the Division moved to Waidhaus, Germany, and the next day attacked across the border into Czechoslovakia where it captured Pilsen, a famous beer and munitions city. This marked the deepest American penetration into Czechoslovakia.

This series consists of histories, after action reports, orders and correspondence. Most of the material pertains to the operations of the Division during its brief period of activity in late April and early May 1945. The period is very well documented, with detailed after action reports describing the activities of the Division and most of its organic elements.

Also of interest is a file of historical records. These pertain to the history of the 16th Armored Supply Battalion, an organic element of the division, and contain much information on its activation and personnel. The file also contains a few documents relating to the early history of the Division as a whole.

20th ARMORED DIVISION, 1943-1946

1600 pages (approximate)
Boxes 121-122

The 20th Armored Division was activated in March 1943, but it did not arrive in France until February 1945 and saw its first combat on April 25, 1945 at Dorf, Germany. The 20th saw about ten days of action in the Central Europe campaign. The division crossed the Danube River, seized a bridge over the Paar River, participated in the attack and capture of Munich, crossed the Inn River, and advanced to Salzburg, Austria.

This series contains unit history material, after action reports, periodic reports, messages, journals, intelligence summaries, field orders, general orders, map overlays, and memorandum. The series covers the Division's history from March 1943 to May 1945 with the bulk of the material covering the period from April 23 to May 10, 1945. The material is divided into seven sub-series according to the classification system of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

Slightly less than half of the series consists of G-3 after action and periodic reports. There are a few folders with material on unit history and G-1 and G-2 reports. The second half of the series is made up of staff section reports for March to May 1945. Of particular interest within the staff section reports are the Division artillery journals for March to May 1945 and the 412th Armored Field Artillery Battalion S-2 journals and messages from April 23 to May 10, 1945.
